A series of photographs depicting staged and arranged subjects, beginning with images of two Arabian horses and one black stallion. The white horses are light and silent, yet there is a sense of discomfort with our intrusion. The stallion’s solidity is also broken by his bleak posture and his cimmerian body merging into the black background making him seem almost translucent.

Dutch vanitas still life paintings of the seventeenth century symbolised the ‘vanity’ of human desires, the futility of luxury and wealth, and the evanescence of life. In these meticulously painted, splendidly illusionistic renderings of the good things of life, subtle hints of incipient decay trouble the luscious surfaces.

The horses become art objects of seamless beauty, while we are reminded of their transient nature.
PIGEON, ARGENTIERA, SARDINIA, 2005
TO VASKEJELLEREN,
OSLO, 2007
PREVIOUS STILLS FROM
GJEMSEL, 9MIN 35 MM
FILM, 2008
Stadtbad Oderberger was once a beautiful neo-renaissance style bathhouse filled with enthusiastic swimmers during the Roaring Twenties, when Berlin was known as Metropolis. Later, the bathhouse provided a sanctuary for the citizens of the city during Nazism, WWII, and the struggle of life under communism. But the communist regime neglected the bathhouse, and in 1986, Stadtbad Oderberger was shut down for good.

‘Stadtbad’ once again became the story of a disappearing life as Anja Niemi played out her images in the derelict buildings of Berlin. The photographs are composed like short plays, where the artist becomes her own puppet, posing in a deconstructive manner. Niemi uses her own body as an object that could just as easily have been thrown away, but like the buildings, she perseveres.

In one photograph Niemi is piled into an old bathtub, with her dissolving arm draped over the edge. Time has been stopped. We don’t know for how long she has lain there, or if her body will deteriorate as time passes. The same could be said for the Stadtbad Oderberger, the building she inhabits. Both possess an element of strength and endurance which prevents them from disappearing completely.
Another photograph, ‘The Puppet’, was shot in Wallstrasse 85, an extravagant building which housed a girls’ dance-school. The academy was shut down because the communist regime did not agree with the dance forms being taught, and the building has been left in a decaying state ever since. The artist places herself in the now empty ballroom, with her limbs on strings, her movements frozen. Niemi is controlled by something, but we are not certain by what or whom.

In ‘Free as a Dead Bird’, (see inside back cover fold) Niemi’s body is split into two, the coffin-like velvet backdrop setting the mood of a dreamlike state. One of the figures lays still as the other rises as if trying to free either herself, or the dead bird she holds in her hand.

The history of the Stadtbad buildings mirror the state of devastation we encounter when we ourselves are not able to rise up after being struck down by the brutality that life can entail. Yet, there is some unknown force which prevents us from surrendering. ‘Stadtbad’ touches upon our fraility and reluctance to recover from these destructions and the contrasting perseverance that stops us from dissolving completely.

As Berlin began to flourish and found its way back to life, Stadtbad and Wallstrasse 85 still remained, surrounded by the buzz of the new city as if nothing had ever happened. The puppet has much the same feeling as she lies silently, knowing that life is continuing on the other side of the walls although she is left isolated in her own diminishing state.
ANJA NIEMI
(b.1976 Oslo)

EXHIBITIONS

2009 - Porcelain. Riflemaker, London
2005 - Photo-London
  The Royal Academy of Art, London
2005 - Portrait of the Invisible. Galleri Ramfjord, Oslo
2005 - Silent Auction. Galleri Ramfjord, Oslo
2002 - Fame and Promise. Victoria Miro Gallery, London
2000 - Metempsychosis: the Bloomsday Project
  The Cave, Brooklyn, New York
1999 - Collection of Norwegian Artists
  Norwegian Seamen Church, New York

FORMAL STUDIES

Porcelain is a Riflemaker exhibition curated by Virginia Damtsta
Book edited by Tot Taylor. Design by Julian Balmie at Vegas Design
Special thanks to Robin Mann at Riflemaker

Published in an edition of 1000 copies

ALSO AVAILABLE IN THE RIFLEMAKER SERIES
Artists Anonymous: Lucifer over London
Alice Anderson: Time Reversal
José-Maria Cano: La Tauromaquia, text by A.L. Kennedy
Voodoo: Hoochie-Coochie and the creative Spirit, edited by Tot Taylor with text by Marina Warner and Zina Saro-Wiwa, 2008
Liliane Lijn: Stardust, 2008
Alasdair Gray, text by Sarah Kent, 2007
Chosil Ki: Living With Andis, co-published with Cornerhouse,
Manchester, 2007
Jamie Shovlin: Lustfaust, text by Jamie Shovlin, 2006
Gavin Turk: Me As Him, text by Tot Taylor, 2007
Riflemaker becomes Indica: by Tot Taylor, with contributions from Barry Miles & John Dunbar, 2006
William S. Burroughs: The Unseen Art of William S. Burroughs with text by Stephen Lowe and James Grauerholz, 2006
Jamie Shovlin: Fontana Modern Masters, text by Martin Holman, 2005
Christopher Bucklow: If This Be Not I by Christopher Bucklow, 2004
Marta Marcé: Playroom, reproduction of the artist’s sketchbook, 2004
Jamie Shovlin: Naomi V. Jesleh, 2004